Time flies when you're having fun!

Another year has passed, with hundreds of Museum visitors spending hundreds of hours looking at artifacts and browsing our electronic collections of pictures, maps, and newspapers. There’s a story behind every visit, and after reviewing them, we wonder if Museum life is governed more by coincidence, statistics, or simply fate.

One Week of Coincidences: One Sunday, a Burien couple who had found us on the web, drove up for a visit. Her folks had been good friends with the Fieldings, and as a child she had often visited Granite Falls. To complete her own family research, she was researching the Fieldings. They were thrilled to find many pictures and newspaper articles, and spent hours looking around. While they were there, a lady came in to browse, saying "My son owns the house next door." [Coincidence #1 - that's the house built for Bud Fielding]. Although they'd never met, they shared some discussions, learned that Fielding's market was in the Klaus Building, and left with pictures of the Klaus store (burned down ca 1920) and it's brick replacement. I promised to put the couple in touch with Rosie Miller, who would know for sure how to reach Judy Fielding.

Two days later, members were working in the Sharp House when two ladies dropped in for a visit. They were descendants of the Klaus family, and had some pictures we could scan. It was lunchtime, so there was time to scan the pictures while they browsed the museum. Then we searched the newspapers and found some wedding and death announcements for which they'd been searching - even one for a wedding that took place in Guam! [Coincidence #2 - they were also interested in both Klaus and Fielding stores and marriages]. We emailed pictures and articles to their home (California) emails, so they’d have them when they returned from their trip.

A couple days later, we received some thank you emails from them, thrilled with the museum material, but disappointed they'd been unable to find the graves of Marie and Henry Klaus when they explored the GF Cemetery on their way to the airport. I promised to take a look, and on Saturday, found them, photographed them, and emailed them the photos and a cemetery map. At the same time, I realized I had forgotten to designate which girls in the photos we had scanned were Klaus girls, so I asked. [Coincidence #3 - the lady with the pictures couldn't find her album, and realized she might have left it in the Seattle rental car! She called them, they had it, and we got credit for the "save" - they throw away lost items after a week!]

Without the questions, she would not have discovered her missing album, and it would have been lost.

Sunday came, and a granddad came in with two grandkids, cousins who were visiting. The kids were talkative, and when asked where they were from, said "Chelan" (not too far) and "Irrigon, Oregon" (spell it for me?). "I-R-R-I-G-O-N" It's just a wide spot in the road, according to their granddad. It sounded more like a name made up to fit into a poem about Oregon.

When they left, the phone rang, and it was the couple who wanted to get in touch with Judy Fielding. I told them I'd call Rosie right then, and have her call them. So I called Rosie, explained what they wanted, and she said "Sure, Judy would be excited to talk to them!". I asked where Judy lived, but I never saw it coming . . . "Oh, they've lived for years in a little town just across the Columbia, called Irrigon, Oregon." [OH, COME ON!]
Three Months of Statistics: Part of our involvement in StEPs (Standards and Excellence Program for History Organizations) involved surveying museum visitors, to get impressions and improvement suggestions.

From July through September, we had visitors evaluate us in a variety of categories, while we also collected data on age, gender, distance traveled, use of mobile technology, and improvement ideas. This data will form the basis for changes and plans for the coming year. Lots of compliments and useful comments were recorded.

Maybe it was Fate: Our digital collections were built upon the labor and love donated by a number of high-school interns, some of whom donated hundreds of hours (well beyond their public service requirement for graduation). We had the pleasure this summer of attending the wedding of “our” Samantha Walker to Neil Hollo. With the experience she gained working with us, Mrs. Hollo is now the site manager for the Appelo Archives Center in Naselle, WA. She was destined for a career of historic preservation – and it started here!

We Can’t Say “Thanks” Enough: Your support has enabled us to finish another year “in the black”, while still keeping the museum an all-volunteer effort, open free to the public. We ask again, as the year nears its end, for you to consider the Granite Falls Historical Society if you are thinking about charitable donations. Every dollar goes into our mission, making our organization a much-appreciated community asset.

Please accept a heartfelt “THANKS” from your 2012 Board of Directors!
